THIS volume differs in one important respect from numerous cook-books,—every receipt here given will bear the test of experiment. There are receipts and receipts, as every mistress of a ménage knows to her sorrow. There are some that read well, but—like Dora's sums in "David Copperfield"—they don't come out right; there are others that are failures even when they are successful. In preparing this collection, the writer has accepted nothing from tradition; she has gone to the kitchen rather than to M. Blot or M. Francatelli for her data; each receipt is the practical result of repeated trials by several hands, and, like a proverb, represents the wit of many.

Often, in turning over some regulation manual of cookery, with its four or five hundred distracting and disappointing pages, the writer has longed for a compact hand-book containing none but reliable and choice receipts for every-day use. When she began making these memoranda, it was with no view of serving any one except herself; but the constant applications she has had for copies of this or that receipt have suggested to her the expediency of printing them. If the compilation prove half as serviceable to other American housekeepers as it has proved to the writer, her very moderate ambition as an author will be satisfied.

CHICKEN SALAD AND SALAD DRESSING.CHICKEN SALAD.

Chickens.
Lucca oil.
Sweet cream.
Yolks of eggs.
Mustard.
Salt.
Pepper.
Vinegar.
Lettuce.
Olives.
Pickled beets.
A very little sugar.

The great object in making a good salad is not to have any one ingredient predominate. Boil the chickens perfectly tender, in water in which a handful of salt has been thrown. When they are cold, cut them up very fine, discarding all the very dark meat, such as legs, etc. Add salt, if it is needed. A little extract of celery, with enough rich sweet cream to thoroughly moisten the chicken, but not enough to make it as moist as salad should be, must now be added. To each chicken the yolks of at least 2 raw eggs. Rub them thoroughly with a silver fork. Add to them as much mustard as is thought necessary, a very little sugar, and a soupçon of cayenne pepper, also salt. Then add slowly, drop by drop, stirring all the while one way, fine, pure Lucca oil. (A good-sized dish of salad will require at least a large-sized bottle of oil.) If the oil is added slowly enough, it will become very thick, without the appearance of oil about it. Just before it is done, add vinegar to taste. Then mix a portion of the dressing with the chicken and lettuce (the lettuce having previously been broken fine with the fingers, not cut). Pour the remainder of the dressing over the chicken after it has been placed on the dish in which it is to be served. Garnish it with slices of hard-boiled eggs, olives with the pits taken out, and bits of pickled beets cut in fancy forms.

2. SALAD DRESSING.

Lucca oil.

Milk.

Vinegar.

Mustard.

Salt.

1 teaspoonful of mustard wet with 1 teaspoonful of milk. Rub to paste. Add a little oil, then milk, then oil and milk again, repeating this until you have as much dressing as you wish to have. Then add a pinch of salt, and 1 table-spoonful of vinegar (more or less, according to taste). Mix in a cool place. Have the oil cold.

Let it boil an hour or two, or until the juices of the meat are extracted. Strain the juice through a fine napkin. Add salt, and, if the patient requires weak food, do not add the wine; but if food of a more stimulating character is needed, put it in, as, combined with beef tea, it is an excellent restorative.
